Peanuts: Good for Eating, Good for Economy

South Carolina is home to 513 peanut farmers who grow 384 million pounds of nuts each year. Yields are growing along with acreage. In 2012, farmers averaged between 2,500 and 4,000 pounds of peanuts per acre. While some farmers have reported yields of up to 6,500 pounds per acre on irrigated land, the average yield is about 3,600 pounds, according to Clemson University peanut specialist Dr. Dan Anco.

Peanuts are legumes, which are plants that bear their seed in a pod. Two types of peanuts are commonly grown in South Carolina: Virginias and Runners.

Virginia types are the best all-around choice for both boiling and roasting. These large-podded peanuts are sometimes called "ballpark" peanuts. Runner types have a prostrate or running growth habit; they are the "peanut butter" peanuts.

Farmers are preparing to plant peanuts within the next month or so. While the prime time to plant is generally the second week in May, some growers with large acreage start planting in late April, Dr. Anco said. The trend has shifted in recent years from about 60 to 70 percent Virginias to more Runners, which last year accounted for nearly 56 percent of the acreage. Around 20 percent of the state's peanuts are irrigated.

The plant will begin to emerge from the soil in 5 to 10 days and will start flowering in 25 to 40 days. The developing peanut fruit begins to enlarge soon after entering the soil. Boiling peanuts typically mature from 90 to 110 days after planting, while roasting peanuts can be harvested in 130 to 150 days. Water is critical at certain stages of development.

Peanuts require a two-stage harvesting process. First, the plants are dug, inverted, and left to dry in the field for one to three days. Then a combine scoops up the plants, sending the peanuts to a hopper on top and rolling the foliage back to earth. The peanuts are taken to buying stations where they are dried, cleaned, inspected and stored.

South Carolina currently has 12 peanut buying stations that are inspected by SCDA graders. Two of those--Rogers Brothers in Lydia and Birdsong Peanuts in Darlington--are planning to build shelling facilities with upgraded equipment to offer the convenience of shelling peanuts in state.

Richard Rentz Jr. of Bamberg, the chairman of the S.C. Peanut Board, said farmers are seeing an increased demand for peanuts. "Domestic consumption is up, and China has bought a lot of peanuts," he said. "Farmers will be planting more, but since peanuts are grown on a strict rotation, there won't be a tremendous increase."

The addition of two shelling stations will have a positive impact on local farmers and businesses, Rentz added. Since farmers are paying freight to ship peanuts 300 miles in each direction, having access to local shelling stations will increase their profit margin. "It will also open the doors for small businesses that use peanuts. Local shellers will give them a supply of local fresh peanuts."

The Peanut Board is a farmer-led organization whose mission is to increase consumer awareness and consumption of peanuts while creating a positive economic impact for producers. The board supports research projects with Clemson University, including weed management, the development of new disease- and pest-resistant varieties, and improved practices for peanut management and harvest.

Multiple tests at both Edisto and Pee Dee Research and Education Centers are used to recommend the most profitable choices for farmers and to evaluate new material for overall performance. For example, new technology helps reduce losses from the digging process.

Marianne Copelan, SCDA marketing specialist for the S.C. Peanut Board, is attending a number of promotional events on behalf of the S.C. Peanut Board & Virginia Carolinas Peanut Promotions. Among them are the Rock n Roll Marathon DC Health and Fitness Expo held March 8-10 in Washington, DC, the Cooper River Bridge Run Health and Fitness Expo in North Charleston on March 30-31, and the Rock n Roll Marathon Nashville Health and Fitness Expo in Nashville, Tenn. on April 27-28.

She encourages people to eat more peanuts, peanut butter, and any peanut product. "Whether you prefer them salted, roasted or boiled, know that you're enjoying a protein-packed, healthy snack grown by farmers right here in South Carolina," Ms. Copelan said. Boiled peanuts are the official state snack of South Carolina. The United States is a major exporter of peanuts to countries around the world.

The Future of Farming

Here at the South Carolina Department of Agriculture, one of our top priorities is supporting the next generation of farmers and providing them with opportunities to grow and succeed. Many readers may know that the average age of a farmer is over 58 years old. In addition, 10 percent of U.S. farmland is expected to transfer between 2014 and 2019, which translates to 91.5 million acres.

With so much land in transition and with current farmers approaching retirement age, now is the time to ensure the next generation has the tools to feed the world. Yet, a major challenge for young and beginning farmers continues to be gaining access to land.

To help, SCDA is launching a new statewide farm transition program, called South Carolina Farm Link. The mission of the SC Farm Link program is to keep land in agricultural use by improving access to farmland for South Carolina's beginning and expanding farmers. What does this mean exactly? Quite simply, Farm Link matches people who are looking to get into farming with people who are looking to get out of farming.

Not only is Farm Link designed to assist those searching for land, but it is also a great opportunity for a retiring farmer to partner with a young or beginning farmer to ensure his or her agricultural operation continues. As a fourth generation farmer, I know that planning for the future of your farm is no easy task.

I have been involved personally in three generations of my family with regards to preparing for the next generation of management. In addition I participated on a panel at the University of Nebraska last summer with other ag leaders from across the country, and I can tell you it's a concern everywhere in agriculture.

If you will be retiring or scaling back your role in your operation within the next 5 to 10 years, and you are not sure who will be taking it on, you may want to consider participating in SC Farm Link. SCDA has a coordinator for SC Farm Link who will facilitate conversations between farm seekers and farm owners. Participating farm seekers will receive direct assistance with locating available farmland and making connections with landowners, and owners will be connected with farmers who are the right fit for their transition needs. Whether it is through a sale, lease, or other form of business partnership, the goal is to make sure South Carolina's working farmlands stay in production and are not lost to development.

There is no cost to participate in SC Farm Link. I encourage you to contact our office if you would like more information or would like to be put in contact with a farm owner or a farm seeker. It's one of our many initiatives here at SCDA to serve the present and future members of this great industry in South Carolina.
